Active Listening

Civic reflection depends on a group to advance the conversation and, through that conversation, explore important or concerning issues. Particularly given the subjective nature of the sources being discussed, shared conversation lies at the heart of a successful civic reflection experience.

This year, 97% of participants again reported listening carefully to what others had to say. Although the self-reported nature of this particular data set may raise questions about student honesty—and the extent to which students would

Planning for 2024

PACE looks forward to facilitating the University's sixth New Student Reflection in the fall of 2024. To prepare for this event, PACE will again facilitate a faculty and staff working group in the spring of 2024 to guide source selection. Participation is open to all members of the university community.

PACE works closely with the Office of Student Affairs in NSR planning. To support faculty/staff and orientation leader training, PACE will again host an event to match pairs on Monday before Convocation. PACE will facilitate faculty/staff training over the spring and summer and orientation leader training in the fall of 2024.
